Doing With, Not Doing For: What it Takes to Facilitate Person-Centered Planning

Summary of a webinar from January 6, 2021

Introduction This webinar is about the skills and abilities (also called competencies) that facilitators need for good person-centered planning. Janis Tondora talked about a new NCAPPS resource called “Five Competency Domains.” This is a friendly tool with the “must-dos” for good planning that keeps the focus on the person.

The five skill areas include:

- Strengths-based, culturally informed, whole person focused
- Cultivating connections inside the system and out
- Rights, choice and control
- Partnership, teamwork, facilitation and coordination
- Person-centered documentation, implementation, and monitoring

These five skill areas can be used in many ways. They can inform hiring, training, and making sure people have good quality supports. You can find slides, transcripts in English and Spanish, recording, Q and A and a plain language summary from this webinar here.

We all badly want to learn what is helpful in this shifting environment. We are also flooded with information. The cliché is that we are trying to sip from a fire hose.

- What are you doing to sort the useful from the less helpful?
- What have you found to be most helpful?
- What suggestions do you have for those who are struggling?
