TOPIC:

Return to Work Anxiety and Creating Psychological Safety

It'll be far easier to navigate anxieties and help those who are worried about returning to work if you know how people on your team feel. You can't assume that your employees will tell you if they're feeling anxious about reentry. People may be fearful of looking weak or not living up to expectations. Therefore, we have to make it safe for people to speak up.

- What are the challenges?
- What are you doing to create a safe psychological space?
- How can you improve?

NCAPPS

Excerpts from Supporting Virtual Meeting Accessibility

By Nicole LeBlanc, coordinator of the Person-Centered Advisory and Leadership Group for NCAPPS

As we work together to stop the spread of COVID-19, more and more of our meetings, conferences, and community events are moving to online, virtual formats. But it is important for meeting organizers to keep in mind that access to technology is not equal. The digital world can pose extra challenges for people with disabilities.

People who were struggling before the pandemic because of things like low wages, high housing costs, and health or mental health challenges or disabilities may not have access to technology that makes these meetings possible. As we all have seen, the effects of the pandemic have been more intense for people dealing with these challenges and for people of color who have been left out of our social safety net.

Many of them may be dealing with even more disruptions and access issues than usual. By being creative, we can weather this storm and figure out how to be more inclusive in our new ways of working and socializing. The complete article can be found here.
